

Bouillon Restaurants

Bouillon restaurants are a type of traditional French restaurant that originated in Paris in the late 19th century. They were designed to provide affordable and hearty meals to the working class. The term "bouillon" refers to a broth made from meat and vegetables, which was a staple in the menus of these establishments.

History

The first bouillon restaurant was opened in 1855 by Pierre-Louis Duval, a butcher who aimed to serve nourishing soups to market workers. The concept quickly gained popularity, leading to the establishment of numerous bouillons across Paris. These restaurants were known for their simple yet hearty meals, often featuring meat, broth, and seasonal vegetables, making them accessible to the broader public.

In the late 19th and early 20th centuries, bouillons became a staple of Parisian dining culture. They were characterized by their spacious interiors, Art Nouveau decor, and communal dining experience.

However, the onset of World War I marked a significant turning point for Bouillon restaurants. With the changing times, they fell out of favor, giving way to the rise of trendy Parisian brasseries. Many Bouillons closed their doors, and their popularity waned.

There were times when only the Bouillon Chartier was left to serve the french classics. Despite a decline in the mid-20th century, recent years have seen a resurgence in the popularity of bouillons, celebrated for their nostalgic charm and traditional cuisine, for example Bouillon Racine in the 6th.

Menu

Bouillon menus typically feature classic French dishes at affordable prices. Some common items include:

- Bouillon (broth) - The foundational dish, often made with beef or chicken and served with vegetables.
- Oeuf mayonnaise - Hard-boiled eggs with mayonnaise.
- Escargots - Snails cooked in garlic butter and parsley. Delicious with a crusty Baguette Tradition

- Blanquette de veau - Veal stew in a creamy white sauce with mushrooms.

Bouillons aim to offer wholesome, traditional French cuisine without the high prices often associated with French dining.
