How to Select or Eliminate Restaurants

- Narrow by Cuisine: Start by deciding on the type of cuisine
- Check Reviews: Use trusted online reviews or apps to find top-rated options, focusing on recent feedback. See following section 'Restaurant Reviews'.
- Consider Location: Choose a restaurant that's conveniently located, especially if you have plans before or after your meal
- Preview Menus: Online menus often give an incite to offerings that match your tastes, dietary needs and budget
- Check Ambiance: Consider the restaurant's vibe—formal, casual, lively, or quiet—depending on the occasion.
- Avoid Tourist Traps: Be wary of places with overly enthusiastic street promoters or menus in multiple languages and photographs of dishes. This menu style often indicates a focus on attracting naive customers, that is tourists. It is better to select a restaurant that will focus on cuisine.

Anthony Bourdain's Tips for Finding the Best Local Food

Follow the Locals

Anthony Bourdain, renowned for his global food adventures in "Parts Unknown," offered valuable advice on choosing where to eat while traveling<sup>1)</sup>. His main tip: follow the locals. Whether it's street food or a restaurant, Bourdain advised choosing spots where locals are willing to wait in line, even if it means overlooking a little dirt. He emphasized that locals know best when it comes to good food.

Avoid the Tourist Traps

Bourdain also warned against tourist traps. He suggested avoiding restaurants filled with tourists or menus with English translations and pictures, as these are typically aimed at tourists rather than locals. Instead, he recommended using online forums to gauge local opinions by provoking responses with bold claims, allowing you to discover better dining options.

Restaurant Reviews

Reviews themselves can be hit or miss, just as are restaurants. But at least reviews are a good estimation of what you might like with respect to cuisine, quality, ambiance and price. We use

- Le Fooding provides light, upbeat, sometimes quirky reviews in English and French. If French does not work for you, translate to English. The translation not be perfect but will give you the idea.
- Michelin Guide Paris Restaurants. I know what you're thinking. A Michelin Starred restaurant will cost a bunch and serve tiny portions. In fact, the Michelin Guide is excellent in that they include inexpensive eateries that serve excellent, authentic and plentiful dishes.
- TripAdvisor Paris. By the way, I also enter my TripAdvisor Reviews as ParisYank of places where I dine...to help you all.

*"There are so many amazing and delicious things to eat and drink in Paris. Why not take some time and select an excellent, memorable meal in a great atmosphere with good service and close friends? ## Be Selective of Meal choices

Once you have carefully selected a likely restaurant,

Make a Rule -> Do not put anything in your mouth that you can eat at home. There are thousands of restaurants that target travelers like you. Many tourists pay dearly for very poor food. For the price of a lousy meal a savvy newcomer can dine on memorable meals every single time. Be Selective.

Finding Seafood Restaurants in Paris

For those looking to explore more seafood options in Paris, the best way is to wander through the city's various arrondissements, especially those near the Seine and in trendy neighborhoods like Le Marais or Saint-Germain-des-Prés. Many seafood restaurants in Paris also offer daily specials based on the freshest catches, so it's worth asking for recommendations when you arrive. Most of these restaurants are easily accessible via the Paris Metro, and reservations are recommended for more popular spots, especially on weekends.

Upscale Seafood

Asian

Vietnamese

is very popular due to French past colonial ties to Vietnam. There are many authentic Vietnamese and Cambodian restaurants but be careful to search for authentic, original SE Asia and not those recently converted from Chinese to more popular Vietnamese. Phở soup is excellent and really cheap in the 13th Arrondissement but far from center Paris. Phở 14 is excellent and cheap. They have expanded to the 1st and 4th arrondissements. The bowls of phở are huge and I always order a small bowl. The big guys give me a sour look but I always walk away completely satisfied.

Japanese

Japanese restaurants have rebounded in the last ten years offering sushi and ramen especially in the 8th Arrondissement. Fresh quality sushi is delivered quickly from Planet Sushi. Beware of "supermarket sushi" that tends to be packaged ahead and stored in a cold case. Ramen is terrific and cheap. Check this ramen guide.

Chinese

- In Paris, most Chinese restaurants are quite poor. There are exceptions but be very selective. Dim Sum restaurants are experiencing a rebound. Sichuan 'Hot pot' Chinese is very good. Try Chung Express despite the name .

Thai

Thai is OK but be very selective

European

Italian

Be selective as there are excellent Italian restaurants but many are just cheap spegheti shops. Pizza is everywhere but not always authentic Italian. Italian Epicerie can be excelent like Eataly in the Marais, a huge deli- style boutique for pick-up but a restaurant as well.

Eastern European

Scandinavian

African

Malgreb

Excellent dishes such as a fragrant Moroccan tagine or Algerian couscous can be found. Be selective. Read reviews. • Icosium is an excellent value. The owner and staff are very welcoming and willing to help you create a memorable Algerian meal. My favorite meal is Hmiss (tomato, pepper and garlic in olive oil), then Tagine aux Olives & Citrons Confits with chicken all enjoyed Algerian rosé wine. It takes a little longer to prepare the Tagine but well worth the wait.

Fusion Cuisine

Because of the mix of different cultures in Paris, there is a fusion of authenticity with creativity of different cuisines such as

Japanese- French

Korean-French

as French trained upscale Pierre Sang and the good value Pierre Sang Oberkompf offer excellent small dishes (tapas) to pick and choose. Pierre Sang Oberkompf offers no menu. You choose how many dishes. When served, the servers politely give you a chance to guess composition of each exotic dish. Fusion restaurants can be a good 'find' since the chef carefully designs a unique dish.

Mexican-French

Michelin Star Restaurants

in Paris are top but can be extremely expensive, prices going into the hundreds of dollars per person. Instead of dinner, book lunch. ## Paris Thematic Dining for whenever you would like an experience you could never have at home

Eat Truffles

- are those superb, scarce mushrooms that taste at the same time, like heaven and earth. There are a several restaurants offering truffles in every course. See these top ten truffle restaurants. I have dined at Truffle Folie several times and found it quite good as long as you take the discount at The Fork.

Eat Escargots

- those scrumptious little morsels taste like nothing else [actually, chewy things with butter, parsley and garlic on a baguette]. Here are the top ten escargot restaurants in Paris.

Eat Foie Gras

- is the wonderful creamy duck or goose liver that is perfect on toast with fig jam. So many restaurants in Paris serve foie gras that I had to rely on a list of top ten restaurants where you can eat foie gras. Note however there are sometimes availability problems due to avian/bird flu.

Eat Frogs Legs

- Really? They taste like chicken? Yeah, I suppose. Whatever. Here are the top ten frogs legs restaurants in Paris. By the way, in a local restaurant I asked the server, "Do you have frogs legs?" He replied, "No, I just walk funny." [sorry, I will let myself out]

Eat Raw Beef

- OK, it sounds disgusting but steak tartare is excellent freshly prepared and served with fries, capers and pickles. Steak tartare will not make you sick, so get over that thought and try steak tartare at a traditional old-style French Bistro. You will like it and have a story to tell back home.

Eat Raw Fish

Cat Cafés in Paris

Cat Cafés are unique establishments where customers can enjoy simple food and beverages while interacting with resident cats. These cafes provide a relaxing environment for cat lovers to unwind in the company of feline friends. They also often aim to raise awareness about animal welfare and support cat adoption.

- Ambiance: Cat cafés typically have a cozy and tranquil atmosphere, designed to be comfortable for both the cats and the customers. The decor often includes plenty of cat-friendly furniture, such as climbing trees, scratching posts, and cozy nooks.
- Cuisine: The menu usually features a variety of beverages such as coffee, tea, and soft drinks, along with light meals and snacks like pastries, sandwiches, and desserts.
- Service: Service in cat cafés is generally relaxed and customer-oriented, with staff ensuring that both the patrons and the cats have a pleasant experience.
- Etiquette and Rules:
  - Respect Boundaries: Cats, like humans, have personal space preferences. Some cats may be social butterflies, while others may be a bit more reserved. It's important to observe their body language and respect their boundaries. If a cat seems disinterested or is showing signs of discomfort, it's best to give them their space.
  - Gentle Touch: When you have the opportunity to pet a cat, remember to use a gentle touch. Cats have sensitive skin, and rough or aggressive petting can be unpleasant for them. Use soft strokes and let them guide you by responding positively or indicating they'd prefer to be left alone.
  - Don't Disturb Sleeping Cats: Most Cat Cafes suggest you do not wake a sleeping cat. They can be startled and avoid people if they are soundly sleeping and a complete stranger shakes them awake.
  - Mind the Tail: A cat's tail can communicate their emotions. A relaxed, upright tail typically indicates they are happy and open to interaction. On the other hand, a swishing or puffed-up tail can signify agitation or fear. Avoid pulling or tugging on a cat's tail, as this can cause discomfort and potentially harm them.
  - Avoid Flash Photography: While it's tempting to capture adorable moments with your camera, flash photography can startle cats and disrupt their peaceful environment. Instead, embrace the opportunity to simply observe and appreciate their beauty without the intrusion of camera flashes.
  - Be Mindful of Food and Drinks: Cat cafés often serve delicious treats and beverages, but it's essential to keep your snacks and drinks away from the feline residents. Cats have specific dietary requirements, and it's crucial that they stick to their regular meals to maintain their health.
  - Hygiene Matters: Before entering a cat café, ensure you follow the hygiene guidelines provided. Washing your hands thoroughly with soap and water helps prevent the spread of germs and keeps both you and the cats healthy. Additionally, avoid using hand sanitizers as some ingredients may be harmful to cats.

- Engage in Play: Cats love to play, and interacting with them through playful activities can be immensely enjoyable. ## Dine in a Chef's Home

- There are at least three Paris Chefs who welcome guests to their homes and serve dishes at a community table. Join a conversation with strangers and relish a unique and personally prepared meal.

Dine in Total Darkness

at Dans le Noir where diners are led, hand on shoulder into a totally black, no lights dining room and served by sight impaired servers. I can assure you that darkness is complete as each diner is even asked to remove their glow-in-the-dark watches.

Each diner has a normal table setting but un-seen. You must feel around to discover plates, glasses and cutlery. There is no menu so everyone must discover the excellent dishes served. Gentle movements, please so you will not tip over a full glass of wine or poke your unknown and unseen neighbor in the nose.

Dine on a Beach

chilled bottle of wine. Include picnic items you bought at a good epicerie.  In the park Bois de Vincenne, you can be fined for littering but not for drinking wine or for being naked.

Restaurants to Avoid

Many “Thai” restaurants are converted from old-style Chinese to Thai because Chinese cuisine lost popularity because of poor innovation and quality. Many Chinese restaurants changed the menu but keep the Chinese chefs. Some converted restaurants do not bother to change the Chinese-language logos or the stone Chinese dragon statues outside. Meh. Avoid any mixed Asian cuisine such as “we specialize in cuisine of China, Japan, Thailand and Korea.”

- Restaurants that Specialize in Everything, Buffets or Rapid Service - “Specialize in Japanese, Chinese, Thai, Korean & Indian”....Eeek! If they specialize in everything, can even one dish be excellent? How much saucy food do they prepare ahead and keep on a steam plate or in a window display?
- Avoid Restaurants with one Trip Advisor review of 5-stars - Once I searched for top-rated restaurants and saw a guy gave a five star review of a burger joint because the guy thought the burgers were the best he had ever eaten in his entire life. Heh? Best meal in his life? Restaurant with only one review, a five-star review—> Avoid.
- Is there such a thing as a five-star pizza? Well, perhaps in Napoli? I adore pizza but for me five-star is reserved for rating best-of-my-life dining.

Fast Food Chains

Fast Food - abounds, Cuisine Rapide. Although cheap, always avoid fast food because of poor quality. Avoid any restaurant with “Rapide” in their name. Never ever, EVER eat at McDonalds or Dominoes Pizza or Starbucks.
